FROM THE CASE FILES: SERVING BY SONG AT THE BACKYARD BBQ

Approaching the scene, I took in the lively sight before me: a backyard barbeque featuring some karaoke shenanigans. Now, I may have gotten a D+ in school choir for my inability to match the right pitch, but I wasn't about to let that hold me back.

"It's showtime, baby!" I whispered to myself, quickly tucking my shirt into my jeans to look presentable for my upcoming performance. I was about to get started, but then the scent of burgers filled the air. Oh, there was about to be some beef, alright! Grabbing myself a quick bite to fuel up for the job ahead - bun, well-done burger, extra tomatoes - I strolled up to the guy in charge of the music, acting like I belonged here.

"DJ, I've got a request for you. 'Papers' by Usher," I said, arching an eyebrow knowingly. The DJ shrugged and thankfully obliged. I grabbed the microphone and started singing. My voice was admittedly off-key, but hey, the last singer wasn't exactly Adele, either!

"Ooh ooh ooh papers, I can't get to work on time, can't believe the words to her I just said!"

"Who is that guy?" someone whispered while pointing at me.

"Do we even know him?" a girl said, thoroughly weirded out by my presence.

Disregarding the unappreciated audience (can't win 'em all!), I approached the Subject, still singing my heart out. The Subject looked very confused.

"Kimberly Danvers?" I asked, the music still playing in the background.

"H-h-how do you know my name?" the Subject asked, eyes wide as she took a step backward from me.

"Because these court papers are for you, my friend."

Ms. Danvers grew increasingly red in the face, much like those extra tomato slices on the burger I'd devoured, as she sheepishly snatched the papers from me and whisked them away from the crowd, stomping across the muddy grass back into her house.

Easiest - yet not exactly the most harmonious - serve ever. Usher may not have been proud, but it was still an overall successful performance. As I headed back to my vehicle, I gave myself a small round of applause. Much like the beef, it was a job well-done.

LITTLE RED FLAGS: HOW TO SPOT A PSYCHOPATH

- Little to no remorse for their harmful actions
- Lack empathy for the feelings of others
- Frequently tell lies to manipulate the people around them
- Noticeable absence of a moral compass
- Often display narcissistic traits (and are frequently rageful)

JUST THE (FUN) FACTS: LIFE AS A PI

Private Investigators are highly trained professionals!

A PI has to obtain a certain amount of hours of hands-on experience in order to obtain their license.

For the first three years of training, an individual who is interested in obtaining their PI license is considered a PIA (Private Investigator Associate), which also requires a license.

After the three years are completed, the PI license may be granted.

NOT TODAY, SCAMMERS!

SCAMS TO KNOW ABOUT: CRYPTOCURRENCY SCAMS

Text messages, communication through social media, or emails that request payment via cryptocurrency (especially Bitcoin) are most likely a scam.

Beware of individuals on dating apps and sites who ask for you to send them crypto or want you to invest in crypto to avoid becoming a victim of a romance scam.

Cryptocurrency payments are not usually able to be refunded, so be sure to make any and all transactions wisely.

Transactions via cryptocurrency are not as anonymous as one may mistakenly think, as they can be traced through the blockchain.

If you believe you have been a victim of a cryptocurrency scam, immediately report it to the FTC.
